PENELOPE STUTTERHEIME

(b. 1958 Cape Town, South Africa)

Penelope Stutterheime is a South African artist currently living and working in Cape Town. She began painting seriously in her early twenties, is largely self-taught and has been painting for over three decades.

The daughter of a forester, Stutterheime developed her intense love for landscape as a child, growing up in Newlands Forest, Cape Town. Later she studied part-time with the artist Simon Stone and the late Bill Ainslie, one of South Africa's finest abstractionists.

Stutterheime's work is highly symbolic, drawing from dream images and the unconscious. Conveyed through colour and form, the images are a representation of transformation. Her paintings are a portrayal of her own inner spiritual process. 'The work reveals a slow unfolding, which continues still, of finding my voice, my dance, my melody. It is nourished by intense feeling, emotion contained on a white canvas, to be felt, to be experienced, to be read from the place where no words yet lie', says Stutterheime.

Stutterheime has participated in solo and group exhibitions consistently over the past thirty years. Her paintings are included in private and corporate collections around the world including Investec, Nashua, Cazenove and Old Mutual.
